Religious beliefs match our individual ability to recognize purpose in life by connecting our real world with our spiritual world. It's often used negatively by most respected lawmakers to make people feel discomfort about their personal experiences. Some people have religions so they can belong into a type of association to fit in. Religion does more on dividing people than uniting them. When it comes to God we manage to ignore and not question things. I see religious representations as collective representations that show collective reality. I'm connecting these two concepts to argue the impact religion has on our daily lives and how it's utilized in our society.

Durkheim argued that " If religion has given birth to all that is essential in society, it is because the idea of society is the soul of religion". People are gullible and we easily get influenced. The fear of being left out limits our freedom. Religion and society go together because people who practice certain religions always form some sort of a community. As much as a religion forces humans to do stuff "rightfully" as to one's knowledge, it can also cause harm in some way. That's unusual and it's often not spoken of. Collective representation simply describes collective beliefs. We pay less attention to how that affects us because we are made to believe that it's the best for everyone. In other words, the limitation of freedom and forceful morals are the best for humans.

 As Noah stated, " The most fundamental characteristic of this mysterious God is that we cannot say anything concrete about him".This is a sad reality that people choose not to believe. When you look through it, you will even start to question your surroundings. Do people ever get to sit and wonder who came up with what God likes or dislikes?. We follow people like us who make us believe stuff about religion and God without hesitations. Just like how every religion has some sort of a "Holy book". Our conscience should make us think about how a book from thousand years ago tells people what to do in this modern-day. Development and growth happens fast. Just by looking at your environment, you can tell that rules are always broken.

believes that freedom has been taken away from society. People even use the name of God to send hate toward individuals. As bad as some people use it for, It also gives others the meaning of life. It gives them hope, courage, and something to believe in. We share the earth with so many different creatures. Do you ever question what they believe in? Do they have a religion? Or were they send in this life for a mission?. These thoughts will run around your head all day but it's hard to voice out. We all have spirituality and corporeality in us. We use whichever favors us at that moment. And that's the power of society and its beliefs.
